GENESIS*The Way We Walk—In Concert
(Polygram Video)

With a studio LP, two live albums, a 60-date world tour and now this live video—culled from three concerts at Earl's Court last November—there can't be a soul alive who doesn't know how Genesis walk...

But although the studio album introduced some fine new songs into their canon—'Jesus He Knows Me' and 'Hold On My Heart' proving particularly durable—as a live entity, Phil Collins And Co. has been walking on the spot for some time now. This video, efficiently shot and directed though it is, furnishes the sad proof. Give or take the three giant video screens, some new back projections and that silly stroll itself, you could be watching the group's last live tour, four years ago.

Their old pal Peter Gabriel's show-stopping performance of 'Steam' at the Brit Awards, complete with Chippendale body mould and dancers hacking through the scenery, showed there's still room for cod theatricality in rock—even when artists are in their 40s... Genesis should learn from that and dump the high-tech rigging in favour of some genuine invention and eccentricity. Achtung Baldy, perhaps? ● 6
